

Antonio Primo

Person

BBC Business, 12.05.11 23:08 UTC

Brazil reduces poverty but industry feels the strain

It is a paradox haunting Brazil's economic-policy makers - ordinary people have never had it so good, but the country's industry is facing its toughest times yet.

GBP USD Getulio Vargas Foundation International Monetary Fund Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva Neil Shearing Dilma Rouseff Russia Brazil China India economist President Marcelo Neri Antonio Primo - collapse

Accuracy

Categories

- Politics
- Business / Finance
- Entertainment / Culture
- Technology / Internet
- Law / Crime
- War / Conflict
- Sports
- Environment
- Disaster / Accident
- Health / Medical / Pharma
- Social Issues
- Human Interest
- Hospitality / Recreation
- Education
- Labor
- Religion / Belief
- Weather
- Other

Search

for topics

Current

City

Washington Tripoli Seattle
Abbottabad London New York City Chicago

Company

Google Inc. Facebook Inc. Twitter Inc. CNN
America, Inc. Burson Marsteller AS Microsoft Corporation
LimeWire

Country

United States Pakistan China United Kingdom
Syria Libya Japan

IndustryTerm

bank oil food airline social-services red car energy

NaturalFeature

Mississippi River

Organization

Taliban White House al-Qaeda Senate
Congress North Atlantic Treaty Organization Republican Party

Person

Osama bin Laden Barack Obama Ron Paul
Ashton Kutcher Charlie Sheen bin Laden David Cameron

ProvinceOrState

Mississippi Massachusetts California
Texas Arizona Nevada Illinois

Region

Middle East Caribbean

Drigger is built by squeezing news through OpenCalais. OpenCalais is kindly provided by Reuters.