

Trump's Long Game, A Justice Pivot, The Comfort of Jazz

 myinforms.com/en-us/a/39890021-trumps-long-game-a-justice-pivot-the-comfort-of-jazz/

Coming up on today's show:

- After Donald Trump tapped Breitbart's Stephen Bannon to head up his campaign this week, several experts are speculating that Trump is maneuvering to create his own conservative media empire that would sustain him if he lost in November. Is there any truth to these claims? Sarah Ellison, contributing editor at Vanity Fair and author of "War at the Wall Street Journal," answers.
- After Univision announced this week that it would be acquiring Gawker Media properties for $135 million, Gawker.com announced it would cease to exist beginning next week. What are the broader implications of Peter Thiel's lawsuit and where are the limits of free speech and personal privacy drawn? Ed Klaris, founding partner of Klaris Law and former general counsel of The New Yorker, weighs in.
- After an injection of cash and a few weeks of national unity, how will Brazil move forward after the 2016 Summer Olympic Games pack up and leave Rio? We speak with two Brazilians — Lúcia Guimarães, columnist and correspondent for the daily newspaper O Estado de São Paulo, and Marcelo Cortes Neri, Brazil's former Minister of Strategic Affairs — about their visions for the future of their country.
- This week, Takeaway Culture Reporter Melissa Locker brings us up to speed on the shows to watch and skip for the start of the fall television season.
- Earlier this week, researchers at the University of Chicago learned more about the deep evolutionary link between human hands and fish fins. Andrew Gehrke, a co-author of the study and a biologist currently working at Harvard University, has the details...

Bold as black? Think about that carefully, especially when remembering the shameful attack by a mob on a young Tanzanian woman in January 2016 in Bangalore. Racism in India has gone largely unaddressed and unacknowledged, for the fear of a strong backlash has silenced even the boldest of victims. Even the majoritarian response has been numb, much like a day's headline that means little the day after. As a response to the attack in January, photographer Mahesh Shantaram spent months d...

Cue lights, camera, repeated action, going around in circles. The new version of "Ben-Hur," out today, should by rights leave its illustrious predecessors in the dust, especially with that famous circuit chariot race. Now we have computer graphics and 3D cinema that should, in theory, vanquish both the 1925 silent version and even the 1959 epic that scooped 11 Academy Awards, including Best Picture. The 2016 version is billed as a reimagining or re-adaption of the story, not a remake. Sti...

John Akre's new film, Demolition Dreaming, is dedicated to his mother, Katherine, who, as he puts it, “took me on a tour of the Metropolitan Building before I was born.” For those unfamiliar with it, the Metropolitan Building is largely recognized as the biggest loss for Minneapolis preservationists, a gorgeous 1890s Richardsonian Romanesque office tower torn down in the early 1960s as part of the city's massive “Gateway” urban renewal project. Akre's new film, set to debut at this weekend's...
