Brazil poverty at lowest level in decade, study finds RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) - Poverty in Brazil has dropped dramatically under the government of President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva, thanks to social programs that have made the president enormously popular among the poorest segments of the population, according to a study released Friday. According to the study released by the prestigious Getulio Vargas Foundation, between 2003, when Silva took office, and 2005 the number of people making less than one U.S. dollar a day in Brazil dropped by 19.18 percent; In other words, some 10 million people were lifted out of extreme poverty. Marcelo Neri, in charge of the foundation's Center for Social Policy Studies, said the phenomenon could almost entirely be attributed to the Bolsa Familia program which provides monthly subsidies to Brazil's poorest families in exchange for a commitment to send their children to school or risk losing the benefits. "Bolsa Familia is the big rising star of the fight against poverty," Neri said.
